SCRIPT FOR WORKING SILENCE (2022)

From the A, Bremen

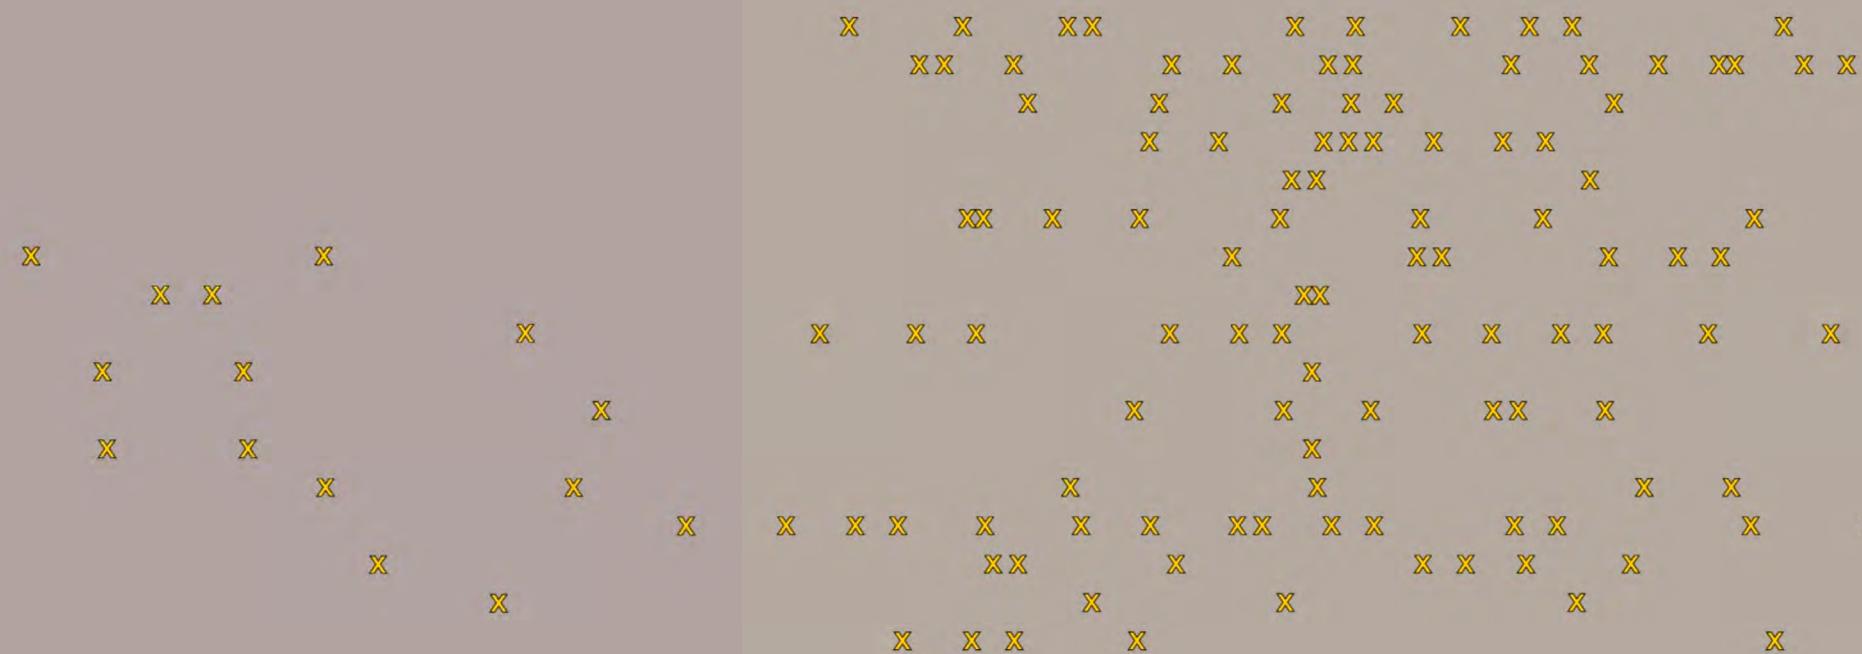

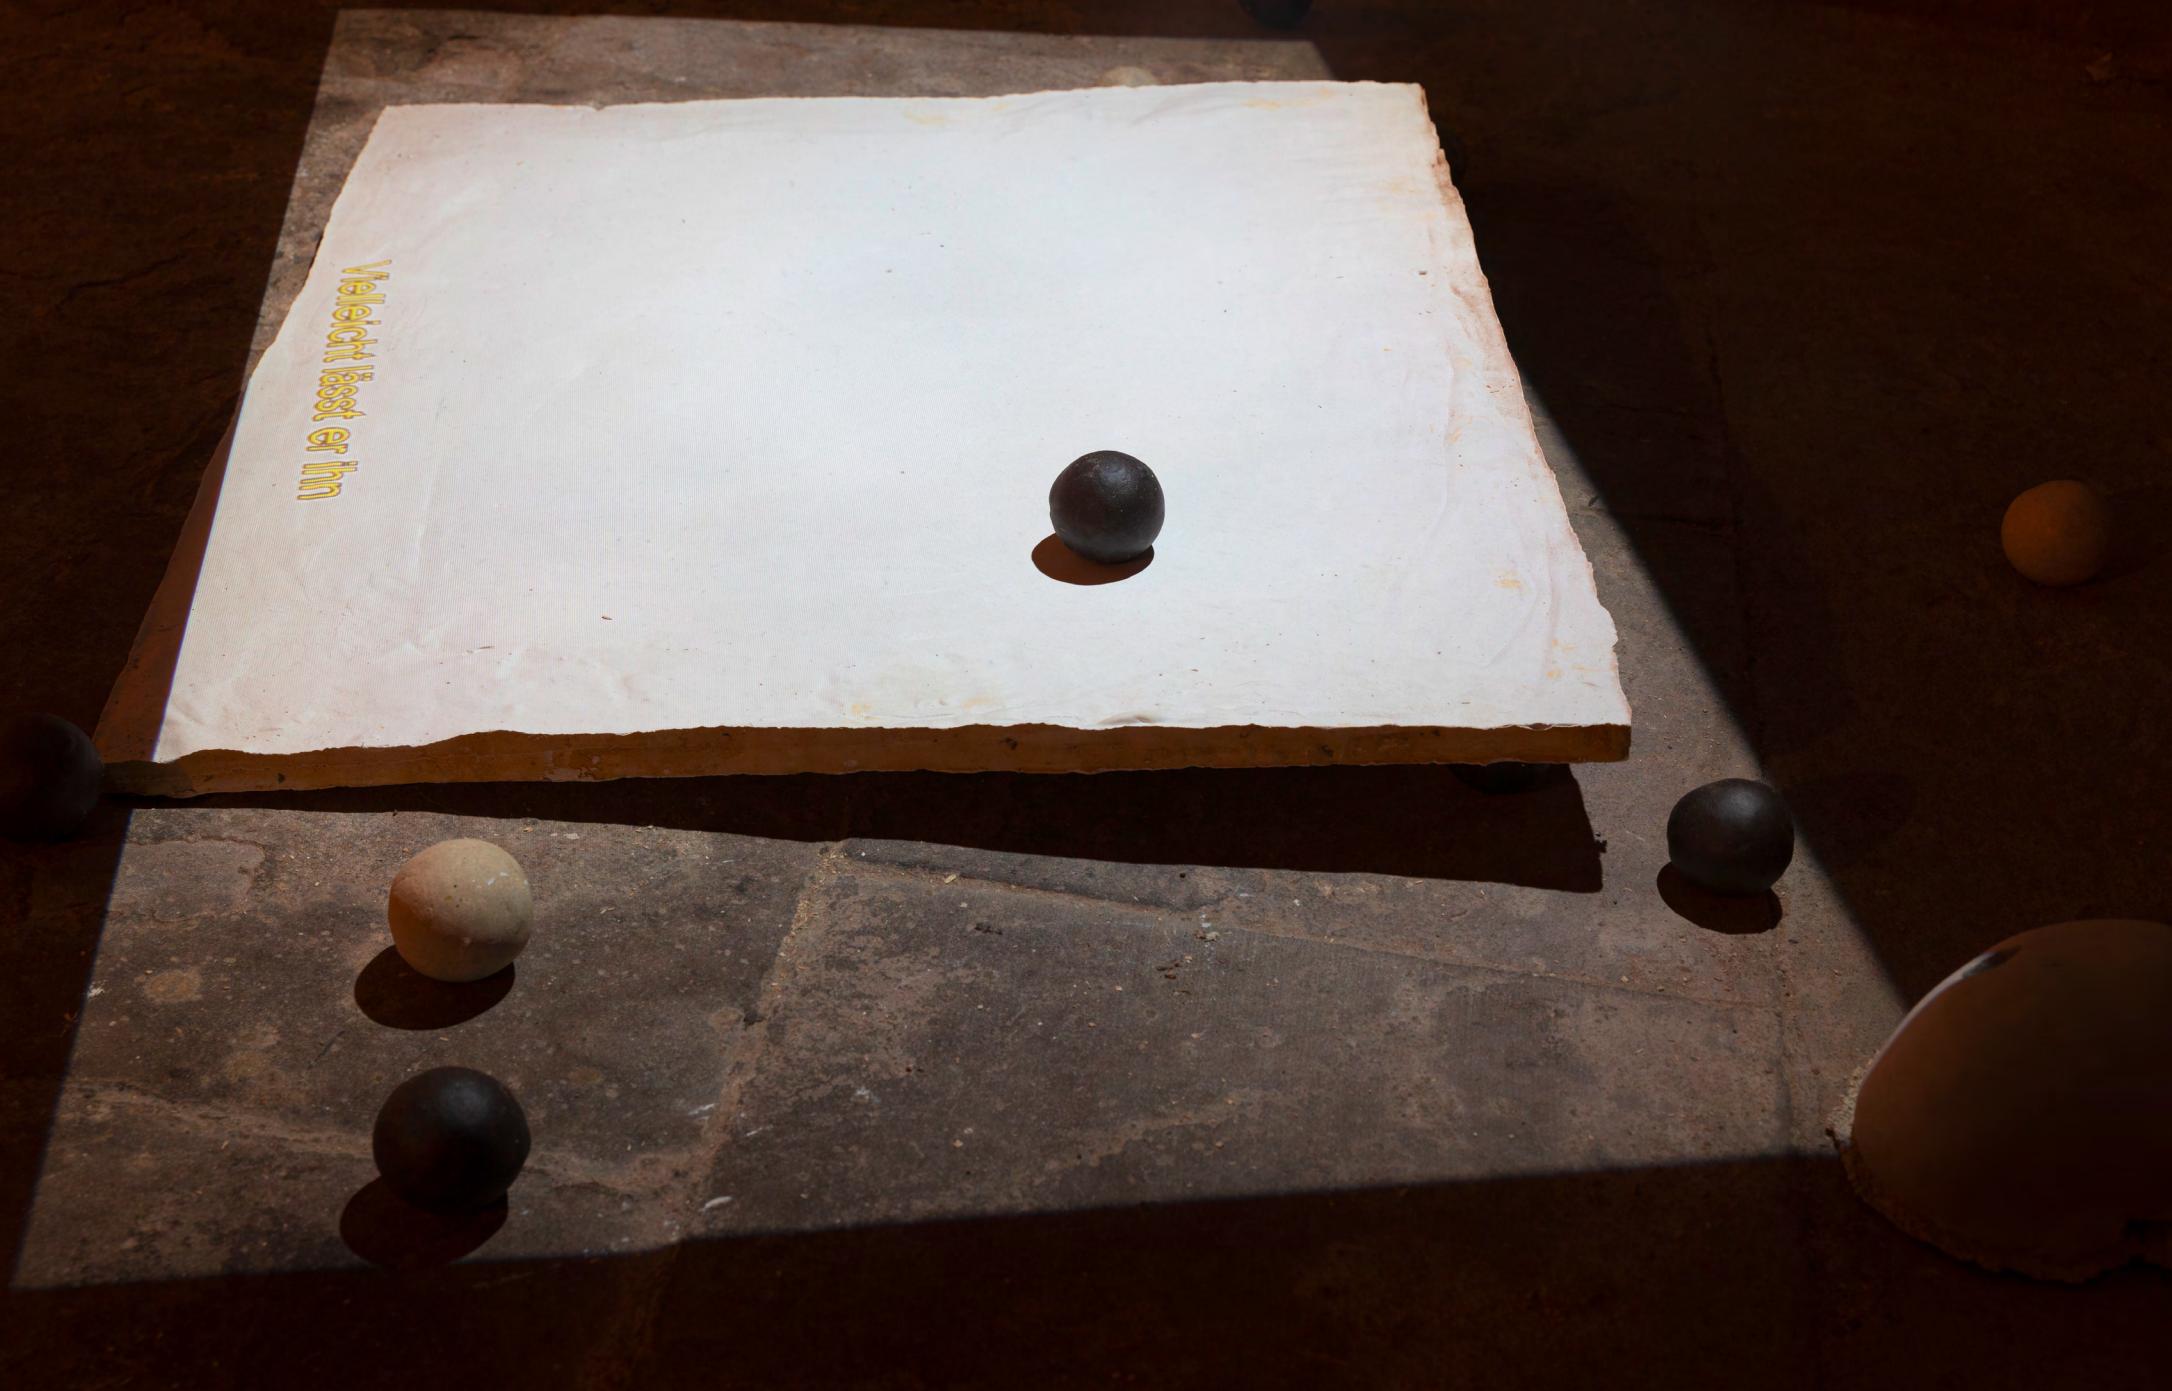

SCRIPT FOR WORKING SILENCE (2022)
Installation (Keramik, Gipsplatte, Videoprojektion, Sound)

*„Der Blick nach draußen, in sicherem Abstand.
Dann hat wer seine Möbel bei dir abgestellt, hat sich eingerichtet. Und dein Objekt ist ein Haus, dein Leerstand eine Situation.
Ihr beginnt, das Bett zu verschieben, denn neben dieser Wand lässt sich nicht schlafen.“*

Was zu sehen wäre, wenn alles dieselbe Entfernung hätte.

to which vessel do I pose my question to?
they all sail on their own and maybe my words make them sink so no vessel but rather the wind it might never make it into a shape

They say: being a certain kind of form in a certain kind of formed space
This is mine, This is yours.
in between there is space for other ways.
who said that?
they remain silent.

when you blew the flute and it vibrated,
there is the aftermath of the tone in the room.
something has its frequency.

[vibrating-voice-tone-echo-humming]

the sound of a seashell, amplifying many frequencies;
i get a little bit more compact within me
just as the octopus moves, sea bed moves.

your skin is mellow
as water, as air

the big shape is a hut,
was a bowl, was smooth,
soaked with desire
now one occupied;
if it was filled, then with the sea.
Now she is low tide,
where tiny crabs surface and the sand breathes

where does the element become a rock turn into clay become material is my work?

They say: relations must be, and always are, expressed whose story is given voice?
and which is your container for the untold ones?

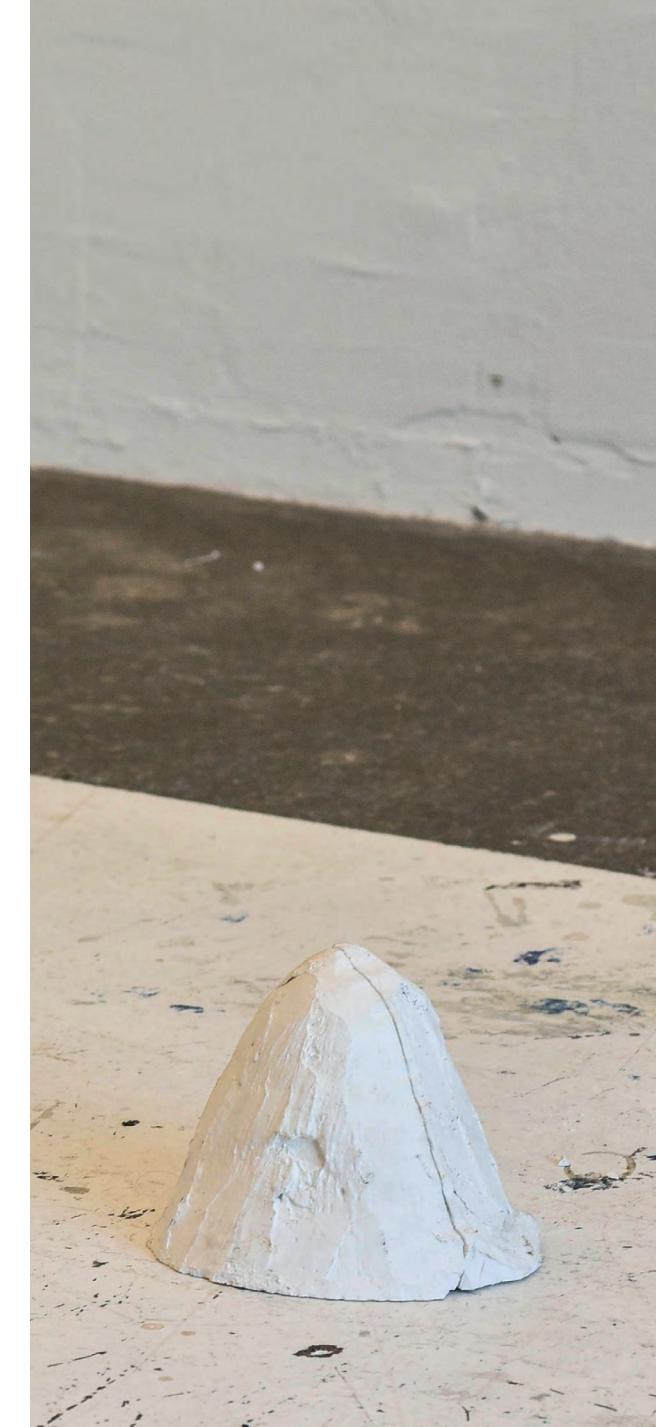

How to ask the oak about its last summer?
politely, the leaves rustle
the wind, I know.
the wind, I like.
the wind carries it all;
nutrition, fire, sickness,
ghosts
and a story.

The wind takes molecules
from my me
to the tree.
it rustles.
it knows now.

ÖRTLICH REGEN (2017)
Bunker Valentin, Bremen

„[...] For different reasons this brings me back to the bunkers in Normandy. They mostly served as a dissuasive presence to prevent potential attacks, as a place to observe the coast. Soldiers must have spent long hours there, entrenched in these solid buildings, not moving, looking at the ocean. Their experience was probably close to the one of the sentinel in the „château-fort“ — one of our war-toys as children. Within the constructions we were building or the games we played outdoors, this essential yet never influential character was spending the game waiting for a potential attack, looking through a tiny window (if one was available) and observing the landscape, i.e. the room or the garden in our case.

In her video, Sabine Peter shows the ocean as filmed from a surveillance camera on the coast. Looking at this massive amount of water, moving in repetitive manner yet never fully repeating itself, she confronts the viewer with an extremely reduced plot, conveying a sense of vacuity.

But this time there is no soldier behind the lens, just the recording machine, suggesting a disconnected relation to the surrounding [...].“
